OBS Project IsLand-A-Hand in honour of the late Mr Lee Kuan Yew's legacy of a clean and green city

More than 300 young volunteers lent their hands in various environmental conservation initiatives organised by Outward Bound Singapore (OBS) at Pulau Ubin and Coney Island this morning, to commemorate the first death anniversary of founding Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew and honour his legacy of a clean and green Singapore.

2 Debunking the myth that young Singaporeans lack idealism, these youths aged between 15 and 35 years old proactively did their part for nature through reforestation, coastal and swamp cleanup, invasive weed clearing, flotsam fence maintenance, species survey and bird box construction. This is the second time OBS has organised this large-scale outdoor conservation classroom, with overwhelming participation.

3 "Service is an integral part of OBS programmes, as reflected in the Outward Bound motto 'To serve, to strive and not to yield'. We have always encouraged participants to care for the environment, and this is an extension of our efforts to harness the shared passion of the community to inspire young people to take greater ownership of our environment and shared spaces," said Nicholas Conceicao, Executive Director of OBS.

4 After the conservation efforts, Mr Lim Liang Jim, Director of National Parks Board shared about the balance between urban development and biodiversity conservation in an educational talk to the volunteers. This was followed by a SGfuture engagement session where youths contributed ideas on how they could take action to promote greater environmental consciousness, responsibility and stewardship.

5 Bringing environmental initiatives into the urban landscape to make them more relatable to youths, encouraging schools to engage in a more extensive discussion of green initiatives with students and supporting more environmental ground-up initiatives from youths are just some ideas generated during the focus group discussion.

6 The day ended with a closing address by Parliamentary Secretary of the Ministry of Culture, Community and Youth, Mr Baey Yam Keng, who lauded the efforts of the youth volunteers to conserve and protect the natural environment.

7 To further encourage youths to appreciate the environment, OBS will also be opening its campus to the public for the first time for a series of March school holiday Nature Appreciation Programme. A total of 11 workshops will be organised featuring activities such as nature treasure hunts, mangrove appreciation and nature photography to promote family bonding and a greater understanding of Pulau Ubin's history, geography and ecology.
